THINGS YOU NEVER DO WHILST GROWING UP IN AN IRISH HOUSEHOLD....PART 3

- Eat a sandwich without a bag of crisps. Whether you're a King or a Tayto kind of person. You could eat the most fulfilling sandwich ever created but it just doesn't hit the spot quite like it would if you had a packet of cheese and onion (not salt & vinegar) to go along with it!
- Never question what your father is doing out in the garden. He may be digging holes in a symmetrical fashion that are exactly three foot apart but never ask why. You won't get an answer. The reason being, there is no answer! "Leave him off, sure he's happy" is the answer my mother would regularly give us!
- Change the channel when your mother is watching Coronation Street. I have friends who are still suffering from the abuse they were subjected to when they unknowingly changed the channel in the middle of Coronation Street.

NO ONE is born hating another person because of the colour of their skin, or their background, or their religion. People must learn to hate, and if they learn to hate, they can also learn to love, for love comes more naturally to the human heart than its opposite

In life, if you are intelligent, you are admired. If you are wealthy, you are envied. If you are powerful, you are feared. But if you are blessed with a good heart, you are remembered always. It's not about the wealth, power, and intellect, but the legacy in life behind to those people whose hearts you have touched.

SÉAN

The sun went down behind KnockMa, stealing the light from the day and casting its shadows all the way to Mayo...
The heavy news clung to the evening's nightfall and spread its way past every bike leaning against a gable...
And into every backyard with a jersey on the line.
It took the wind from our lungs,
and the words from our tongues,
and left us sleepless, bewildered and numb.
The early morning's sun drew the glisten from Dooley's lake as the water made its peaceful journey over each and every stone at the Cloughán
and on into the Black River
past the castle and the mill.
The border bridge above comes alive with the sounds of early morning risers who pass
through the tidy village,
with its freshly swept paths and
its baskets of bright and colourful flowers.
The crow on the steeple knows nothing of Facebook or Instagram, yet he puts on a show worthy
of any camera's lens.
He glides elegantly over the fields of Tobernadarry, Gurteen, Woodpark... earning his rest
on the lighthouse at Ballycurrin.
The midday sun soars high into the sky and warms up the ruins that lie in the green fields of Shrule, Glencorrib and Kilroe.
From the Abbey at Kille to the mass rock at Ballynalty,
from the high walls of Dalgan
to the Turlough at Romolin...
there were stories of heritage
and history that were worth hearing.
There were reports of football matches
and local events that were worth knowing.
There were memories, and videos and pictures of the past that were worth seeing....

And we got to hear them,
know them,
see them... because a gentle
soul
took on a giant role.
And we were privileged.

~ Geraldine Monaghan

JUST A THOUGHT:

From the mid-19th to the mid-20th century, a succession of English-speaking intellectuals converted to Catholicism, among them some familiar figures: John Henry Newman, G. K. Chesterton, Graham Greene, Evelyn Waugh, and Thomas Merton. In the days when religion formed a central element in popular culture, these conversions made headline news. It was seen as 'serious stuff'. But not all conversions are explicitly religious. So, what makes a person who has strong opinions change their mind?

This week I read the obituary of a man I had never heard of before, Ray Hill. As a young man he got caught up in right wing politics and became anti-Semitic and racist, eventually joining the neo Nazi movement. Then he did a dramatic turn around. He realised he had gone terribly wrong and, to make amends, he became a mole in the organisation. He exposed their secret activities to the public gaze, thereby rendering them ridiculous and virtually ineffective. Of course in the process he risked his own life on several occasions.

What was so instructive were the two experiences that led to this 'conversion'. Although his wife Glennis, whom he married in 1966, tolerated his political involvement, his arrest for riotous behaviour and actual bodily harm in 1969 led to their decision to emigrate to South Africa. On arrival there, Hill resumed his extreme political activities. He and his young family soon fell on hard times, and they were looked after by kind Jewish families, with whom he remained life-long friends. The second experience was even more influential: he saw a totally destitute Indian family being turned out of their home with their few possessions, which he realised, was the result of his activities. These two experiences totally changed him.

To be open to change we have to be willing to question the assumptions of the groups to which we belong. BBC radio recently broadcast a wonderful play called 'Cancelling Socrates.' The subject matter is the greatest questioner of all, Socrates of Athens. The play is obviously directed to the cancel culture of our own time, when some people simply refuse to hear certain points of view, blocking their ears and minds. Socrates was condemned to death. And what was his offence? Simply asking questions about the values we should live by, the assumptions of the society to which we belong, and ourselves.

A parallel is often drawn between the death of Socrates and that of Jesus. Socrates posed questions in philosophical form; Jesus told stories and asked people to reflect on where they stood in relation to them. Who did they identify with in the stories? He challenged people to see themselves as they are and, to use the old word 'repent'. Unfortunately, the true meaning of the word 'repent' has been lost in translation. People think of it as forcing them to feel bad about themselves when they feel nothing of the sort. But the Greek word suggests it is about re-orientating our lives. For Jesus this was a re-orientation to what he called the kingdom of God. He invited people to be the kind of people who would be at home in this Kingdom. In a secular context, it means asking questions about what we live by, and rethinking our lives towards what, in our best moments, we want to be.

Kindness is loaning someone your strength instead of reminding them of their weakness.

STAMP DONATIONS: You may have seen the box of stamps in Shrule post office, or the box in Glencorrib church porch? These used stamps are collected by a religious order based in Dublin called 'Handmaids of the Sacred Hearts' who recycle the stamps so they can be sold to stamp collectors. The money raised from this is used to give financial support to various projects the order is involved in around the world. They have sent some booklets which are available in the church porches with information on the work they are able to do as a result of your support. Thank you for your kind support, and if you have not recycled your old stamps, maybe you will consider doing it now.
