NATURE MATTERS

Though I mark out a territory and call it 'mine' there are other creatures that also call it home and raise their families there. They know the local scene and have a favourite place from which to view the world; hence, all the nest building, burrowing and looking for a hideout to winter in.

Take a hedgehog for instance, who can ramble up to two kilometres at night, the one my friend found inside his back door recently. His first thought was that it had snuck in for little warmth as the door was open; then climbed onto the dog's sofa, curled up and went to sleep. Later he had to concede it had to be Mack, his springer, who had carried in the spiky ball from the garden and placed it there.
