Landowner. Historical or traditional notes.

On the shore of Lough Beolly in Lissardine Barland is a place called Uaisín na Gallairí i.e. the "stony place of the crosses". A little to the south is Lug na Kola, the "bloody hollow". Tradition says that, centuries ago, a battle was fought here against the heathmen, who, with their womenfolk, invaded Leickeeney. It relates that the heathmen suffered heavily and that their wailing womenfolk went on their knees and covered the ground. Hence Uaisín na Gallairí. . . . Some years ago the remains of hundreds of human beings were unearthed at the place.

From notes supplied by Mr. Flannelly N.T., Attorney N.S., who furthermore is of opinion that the battle on Lug na Kola was between a party of Scotch who, according to the Annals, landed at Inchmahon in 1586 A.D. and the forces of Rimglan, Governor of Connaught. The Scotch had 1400 fighting men and as many women and serving men. They were joined by a small band of Irish and, evading Rimglan at Leickeeney, they plundered westward. Rimglan however came to Canada and from there swept down on the Scotch who were decimated.
